

BELL NUNNALLY TEAM DEFEATS INJUNCTION BID, PAVING WAY FOR ARTIST'S ALBUM RELEASE

October 16, 2024

Bell Nunnally Partner Brent Turman, Senior Associate T.J. Hales and Associate Meredith Palmer successfully fended off a request for preliminary injunction in a matter related to the music of a prominent deceased musical artist. The defendants, whom the Estate has claimed are interlopers attempting to unlawfully profit from the artist's music, sought a preliminary injunction to prevent the Estate from releasing music written and performed by the artist during his lifetime. One of the defendants claimed he was a producer because he helped with recording sessions of one of the to-be-released songs. The court denied the defendants' request and found that the defendants did not proffer evidence of co-authorship, among other things. Accordingly, the Estate was able to release an album, which skyrocketed up the Apple Music charts for the respective genre.

Related Practices

Litigation

Intellectual Property

Practice Area Contact

Brent A. Turman

Troy "T.J." Hales

Meredith N. Palmer